

David Hoenig

I first became interested in woodturning in about 1976 when I found a 1943 Rockwell Delta wood lathe in a garage sale. At that time there was not much media available for aspiring woodturners, so I found a book written by Richard Raffin and began my journey practicing, with very little success.

Life got in the way, and fast forward to about 2009 when I took a three-evening class at Woodcraft taught by the talented John Horn. Since that time, I joined AAW and four affiliate local clubs, I have attended many workshops, open shops, and attended a few classes taught by professional turners. I have attended symposiums in Texas, Utah, and Tennessee and hope to go to many more. All this striving to be the best woodturner I can be.

My interests include hollow forms, bowls, platters, and any new challenge. I am currently exploring working with color and embellishing tools attempting to make art using my creativity.

I am humbled that Kevin asked me to be his assistant for this class. My goal is for all of us to have fun learning.
